Donor:	Durham People's Alliance
Relationship of donor or materials to the DCL/NCR	One of the largest progressive organizations in Durham, the Durham Chapter of the People's Alliance is an influential voice in local politics and culture. For the past 30 years, they have been central figures in Durham and North Carolina issues; their positions have been carefully-heeded, both by the local media and the local and state governments.
Processor:	Amy McDonald, Kristen Merryman
Description:
Subject Headings:	People's Alliance for a Cooperative Commonwealth (N.C.).
	People's Alliance (Durham, N.C.).
	Citizens' associations -- North Carolina -- Durham.
	Political activists -- North Carolina -- Durham.
	Political participation -- North Carolina -- Durham.
	Community life -- North Carolina -- Durham.
Abstract:
Scope and Content:	The records of the Durham chapter of the People's Alliance reflect the central role that the chapter played during the early days of the statewide organization. Early organizational files include documentation of statewide action campaigns, events, and organizational development activities, as well as some documentation of other PA chapters and associated organizations. Chapter files, which comprise the bulk of the collection, cover the range of the organization's activities, from membership recruitment, fundraising, and public outreach to numerous campaigns and activities in support of a wide variety of progressive issues. These campaign files demonstrate the strong influence of the organization upon state and local politics, as well as its commitment to working in coalition with other local, state, and national progressive organizations. Materials include correspondence; meeting minutes and associated documentation; newsletters and other publications, brochures, and other outreach pieces; issues research, including printed reports and newspaper clippings; and a small number of black-and-white photographs.

Biographical/Historical Note:	Founded in October 1975 by Durham and Chapel Hill progressive activists, the People's Alliance for a Cooperative Commonwealth took its inspiration from the Populist movement of the 19th century, whose supporters "dreamed of an eventual 'cooperative commonwealth' that would replace the system of ruthless competition." At its height, the organization included chapters in Avery, Guilford, Wake, and Orange Counties, Wilmington, Winston-Salem, Charlotte, and Cape Fear. The organization itself is complex: in addition to the various chapters and other associated organizations (including the North Carolina Occupational Health and Safety Project), the statewide organization, a 501(c)4 led by a Steering Committee, also includes the People's Alliance Fund, a 501(c)3 established in 1980 and led by a Board of Directors, and the People's Alliance Political Action Committee, established in 1982. In the early 1980s, as the various statewide chapters declined in activity, the Durham chapter became the primary operating organization, turning the organization's attention to local Durham affairs and assuming more explicit control over the activities of the Fund and the PAC. Befitting their key role in local and state politics, several People's Alliance members, including Paul Luebke, Diane Catotti, and Frank Hyman, have served in public offices.
