Biographical / Historical

Wells Eddleman is a native North Carolinian and resident of Durham, North Carolina, and a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Class of 1971. He was a teacher and energy manager at the Carolina Friends School, as well as a prominent energy consultant and frequent expert witness on energy-related issues before the North Carolina Utilities Commission and other bodies. Eddleman has been an activist for energy efficiency, supported stricter nuclear energy regulations, and called for increased nuclear plant safety. He also warned against what he felt was excessive growth of the nuclear industry in North Carolina in the mid-1980s. Specifically, he sought alternatives to the Shearon Harris Nuclear Power Plant in Wake County.
